Groundbreaking Addiction Community Website*

San Francisco—August 23rd -- Addicted.com – the website that offers resources for addicts and their families to find support and recovery resources online, has announced that mental health, addiction and trauma expert Randy Wyatt, PhD has been added to the site as an Addiction Treatment Professional.

Wyatt has over 17 years experience practicing counseling and psychotherapy and supervising psychotherapists. He works with individuals, couples and families. Among his treatment specialties are helping individuals cope with transitions, trauma and loss, overcome depression and anxiety from personal or work stress, and develop a sense of meaning and direction in life.

As an Addiction Professional on the Addicted.com website, Wyatt will contribute articles, insight and interface with the site's users in a Q&A style forum.

The Addicted.com site features a full slate of professional addiction experts that specialize in the diagnosis and treatment of common addictions including: eating disorders, gambling, sexual addiction and drug and alcohol addiction. The site also offers people seeking help a Zip Code Locator which visitors can use to find nearby recovery centers, doctors, counselors and other assistance for their addictions.

“It is an honor to welcome Dr. Wyatt as one of our distinguished national experts at Addicted.com,” said site Founder and CEO John S. Shegerian. “He is well known among the addiction treatment community as psychotherapist who effectively engages his people in rediscovering themselves in recovering from harmful addictions. As someone who has dedicated his career to helping people get better, he's a perfect match for Addicted.com.

No stranger to the internet, Wyatt is also Editor-in-Chief of an online website for psychotherapists, Psychotherapy.net, which features candid in-depth interviews with the most influential psychotherapists of our times as well as offering videos of psychotherapy in action.

Wyatt received his doctorate in clinical psychology from the California School of Professional Psychology, San Francisco in 1989. He received his BA and MA in Psychology from CSU Sacramento. He currently practices in Oakland and Dublin, California and he is a member of the American Psychological Association and the California Psychological Association.

“For many addictions there is a great deal of shame involved when trying to get help,” said Wyatt. “Addicted.com provides a terrific solution to the problem of people being too ashamed to reach out. The site is good on a number of levels. It offers hope to the addicted community because they can see that they are not alone and that getting better is a possibility; and it also serves as a great educational resource. If someone struggling with an addiction can get access to a little bit of good information, it can be the start of an effective recovery.”

Visitors to the site can send Wyatt and the other Addicted.com Addiction Professionals questions anonymously. They can also take self-tests to help determine whether they have an addiction and may need to seek help. Articles, advice, experts and other resources give users the option of complete anonymity if they are seeking resources but aren’t ready to share their story with the world. To add even more in-depth assistance, addicted.com added an online “Aftercare” program, designed to continue giving support to addicts after their treatment has ended.

Addicted.com provides addiction recovery resources and tools for addicts, family members and friends throughout the Internet community. The main goal of the site is to maintain a well-known on-line space for people to visit when they need advice, answers, assistance or just someone to talk with.
